This document sets out guidelines for creating, reviewing, and revising quality plans. These guidelines are relevant to all types of output, including processes, products, services, projects, and contracts, regardless of the organization's size or industry. It does not specify requirements but provides guidance on how to achieve quality outputs. The focus is on the delivery of specific cases, rather than planning a quality management system. Note: To avoid repetition of multiple terms, this document uses the term "specific case" instead of process, product, service, project, or contract. The ISO 10005 standard provides guidelines for creating effective quality plans, supporting the development of organizations in various industries. Unlike an overall quality management system plan, it focuses specifically on product or service realization, helping companies establish and maintain high standards.
